Fun fact: Danny Elfman, the composer, is a frequent collaborator of Tim Burton's. He also worked with him on Batman Returns, Corpse Bride, and Charlie and the Chocolate Factory.
Fun fact: Chris Sarandon, voice of Jack, played Prince Humperdinck in Princess Bride.
Fun fact: Danny Elfman does the voice for Jack when he sings, as well as the voices for Barrel and a clown in Halloween Town.
Fun fact: Zero's glowing nose is actually a glowing jack-o-lantern.
Fun fact: In 2001, Disney considered doing a computer-animated sequel to the movie.
Fun fact: The concept for the movie was based on a poem of the same name; it was written by Burton in the 80s.
Fun fact: Tim Burton's 'The Nightmare Before Christmas' poem, which inspired the movie, was based on Burton seeing a store taking down their Halloween decorations and replacing them with their Christmas ones.
Fun fact: Vincent Price was originally cast to play Santa Claus.
Fun fact: It took a team of over 100 people and about 3 years to complete the film.
Fun fact: 12 stop-motion frames were used to create 1 second of the film.
Fun fact: The final film had a total of 109,440 stop-motion frames.
Fun fact: The original narration in the beginning of the film was voiced by Patrick Stewart, but was ultimately cut.
Fun fact: Tim Burton wanted to direct the movie, but he was already working on 'Batman' (1989) and 'Ed Wood' (1994) at the time.
Fun fact: Director Henry Selick said that Burton was only present 8-10 days of the movie's production.
Fun fact: The most difficult shot to film was the one where Jack's reflection can be seen on the doorknob to the door to Christmas Town.
Fun fact: Dr. Finkelstein isn't listed by his name in the credits, instead it's "Evil Scientist".
Fun fact: When the film was re-released in 2006, it was fully under the Disney banner (not Touchstone Pictures).
Fun fact: Tim Burton's 'The Nightmare Before Christmas' poem, which inspired the movie, originally only included just Jack, Zero, and Santa.
Fun fact: Sally's insides are composed of leaves.
Fun fact: The snake toy in the film resembles a sandworm from 'Beetlejuice'.
Fun fact: The cat toy in the film resembles the mascot for Shreck's Department Store in 'Batman Returns' (1992).
Fun fact: The duck toy in the film resembles the duck vehicle the Penguin drives in 'Batman Returns' (1992).
Fun fact: Each minute of the movie took an entire week to film.
Fun fact: There are around 60 different characters in the film, and each one was 3-4 duplicate puppets.
Fun fact: The film's sculpture department only consisted of 4 people.
Fun fact: Jack Skellington had over 400 different puppet heads for filming.
Fun fact: Sally didn't have different puppet heads, instead she had different puppet face masks to express different emotions.
Fun fact: Sally had 10 different puppet face masks and each one had around 11 expressions.
Fun fact: Many of the film's sets required 20-30 lights to achieve its dramatic look.
Fun fact: There were about 13 animators working on the film.
Fun fact: The film utilized around 8 different camera crews.
Fun fact: The set of Halloween Town was designed to break into smaller pieces because the whole thing was too big to fit in one space.
Fun fact: To animate Jack blinking, wedges were shoved into his eyes (his blinks were around 3 frames long).
Fun fact: Gregg Olsson, the film's set designer, built a quarter scale mock-up that served as a model for the set.
Fun fact: The film's set had trap doors that allowed animators to pop up and animate from below.
Fun fact: The film required a total of 230 sets.
Fun fact: When working on the songs for the film, Danny Elfman wasn't given a script, instead Tim Burton just described scenes to him.
Fun fact: The film's crew included over 100 camera operators, puppet makers, puppet builders, and prop makers.
Fun fact: Tim Burton was friends with Henry Selick, which is why Selick got the job to direct the film.
Fun fact: 'The Nightmare Before Christmas' was Henry Selick's directorial debut.
Fun fact: After 'The Nightmare Before Christmas', Selick directed 'James and the Giant Peach' (1996) and 'Coraline' (2009).
Fun fact: The visual style of the film's sets was inspired by illustrations from Ronald Searle and Edward Gorey.
Fun fact: In the film's original ending, Oogie Boogie was going to be Dr. Finkelstein in disguise.
Fun fact: Disney wanted to build a 'The Nightmare Before Christmas' ride at Disneyland, but Tim Burton shot down the idea.
Fun fact: Jack Skellington makes a cameo in 'James in the Giant Peach' (1996) as a pirate skeleton.
Fun fact: In the original design for Jack Skellington, he wore an all black suit.
Fun fact: At first, Disney wanted Jack to have eyes, but Tim Burton and Henry Selick were firm in their belief that he shouldn't have eyes.
Fun fact: In an epilogue that wasn't included in the final film, Jack and Sally would hve 4-5 kids.
Fun fact: The movie's model artists would draw characters with their non-dominant hand to give the character designs that "unnerving kick".
Fun fact: The film's sets and costume designs were influenced by German Expressionism.
Fun fact: Oogie Boogie was meant to be "one of the worst things you could get on Halloween": a sack of bugs.
Fun fact: Despite the fact that he's the antagonist of the film, Tim Burton doesn't believe that Oogie Boogie is evil.
Fun fact: Tim Burton had plans to make a sequel to the movie, but decided not to do it; it's title would've been "The Unlucky Clover".
Fun fact: The Jack Skellington puppets used for the film were made of clay.
